

DEVANEY CENTER: ENDING AN ERA

The Bob Devaney Sports Center has been the home of Nebraska women's basketball since November of 1976. Named after legendary football coach and athletic director Bob Devaney, the Sports Center has given the Huskers a major homecourt advantage. In fact, Nebraska built a 28-game winning streak at Devaney from 2009 to 2011. In 2009-10, the Huskers were a perfect 16-0 at home. Over the past five seasons Nebraska is 65-14 at home with 11 wins over top-25 teams.

Husker fans have helped the Big Red rank among the top 30 nationally in average home attendance for more than a decade, including 19th in 2011-12. In 2009-10, the electric crowds helped create a magical experience at the Devaney Center, as NU averaged 11,383 fans per league game. A school-record crowd of 13,595 helped Nebraska celebrate a Big 12 title with a win over Missouri on Feb. 27, 2010. NU ranked seventh nationally in attendance with 7,390 fans per game.

The University of Nebraska provides its women's basketball program with some of the best support in the country. In 2011, the Huskers welcomed the addition of the Hendricks Training Complex to the South side of the Devaney Center. The Hendricks Training Complex provides a new practice facility for men's and women's basketball, along with new locker rooms, team areas and coaches offices.
